CONTENTS OF No. CCXII.

Art.		Page
I.	Indian Superstitions	1
	Mémoire sur les Mœurs, Coustumes et Relligion des Sauvages de l'Amérique Septentrionale. Par Nicolas Perrot.
II.	The Mahabharata	18
	1. Indian Epic Poetry, being the Substance of Lectures recently given at Oxford. By Monier Williams.
	2. Poésie Héroïque des Indiens. Par F. G. Eichhoff.
	3. Onze Épisodes du Mahabharata. Traduits par Ed. Foucaux.
	4. Traduction complète du Mahabharata. Par H. Fauche.
	5. Ardschuna's Reise zu Indra's Himmel. — Diluvium cum III. aliis Maha-Bharati Episodis. — Nala und Damayanti. Uebersetzt von Franz Bopp.
III.	Sumptuary Laws	69
	1. On Liberty. By John Stuart Mill.
	2. Prohibition of the Sale of Intoxicating Liquors impracticable; the Maine Law a Failure; a stringent License Law the true Policy. By B. F. Clark.
IV.	Moral Criteria and the Moral Sentiments . .	89
	1. Dissertation on the Progress of Ethical Philosophy, chiefly during the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries. By Sir James Mackintosh.
	2. The Emotions and the Will. By Alexander Bain.
	3. Elements of Psychological Medicine. By Daniel Noble, M. D.
	4. The Human Brain, its Structure, Physiology, and Diseases. By Samuel Solly.

V. The Mexican Question 106
Messages of the President of the United States to Congress, with accompanying Documents relating to Mexican Affairs.

VI. John Randolph 142
1. The Life of John Randolph of Roanoke. By Hugh A. Garland.
2. A Biography of John Randolph of Roanoke. With a Selection from his Speeches. By Lemuel Sawyer.
3. Letters of John Randolph to a Young Relative, embracing a Series of Years from early Youth to mature Manhood.

VII. The Mechanics of Modern Naval Warfare . . 185

VIII. English Poetry of the Period 221
The late English Poets. Edited by Richard Henry Stoddard.

IX. The Right of Suffrage 241
The Workman and the Franchise. Chapters from English History on the Representation and Education of the People. By Frederick Denison Maurice, M. A.

X. Critical Notices 250
Mill on Hamilton, 250. — Alden's Philosophy, 260. — Life and Times of Gardiner Spring, 269. — Palgrave's Central and Eastern Arabia, 276. — Güterbock's Bracton and the Roman Law, 284. — Swinton's Army of the Potomac, 287. — The Daily Public School in the United States, 291. — Ecce Homo, 302. — Beardsley's History of the Episcopal Church in Connecticut, 307. — Spare's Differential Calculus, 308.

List of some Recent Publications 309

INDEX

TO THE

HUNDRED AND SECOND VOLUME

OF THE North American Review.

Alexander, C. F., her Sunday Book of Poetry, critical notice of, 315, 316.

Allingham, William, his Ballad Book, critical notice of, 316–318.

Art in America, The Conditions of, article on, 1–24 — the indifference of Americans to art, 1–7 — their appreciation of poetry and music, 2 — ignorance of architecture, 4, 5 — conditions necessary to high achievements in art, 7 — best American genius not devoted to art, 8 — importance of art in educating the people, 10, 11 — signs of change in public mind toward art, 11 — art not dependent on forms of government, 13, 14 — inadequateness of current criticism, 3, 4, 15 — distinction between "naturalism" and "realism," 16, 17 — definition of "idealism," 17, 18 — artists must use a language understood by the people, 18–20 — nature and importance of imagination, 21, 22 — duty of the public to art, 23 — duty of artists in respect to criticism, 23, 24.

Bigelow, Jacob, his Address on the Limits of Education, critical notice of, 592–598.

Bowles, Samuel, his Across the Continent, critical notice of, 619–623.

Brougham, Lord, his treatise on the English Constitution referred to, 331.

Buchanan, Robert, his Poems, critical notice of, 555, 556.

Burke, Edmund, Vols. III. and IV. of revised edition of his works, critical notice of, 634–637.

Bushnell, Horace, his Vicarious Sacrifice, critical notice of, 556–571.

Carey, Henry C., his Currency Question referred to, 115–119.

Carlyle, Thomas, his Frederick the Great, article on, 419–445 — elements necessary for literary immortality, 419–422 — present demand for sensations, 422, 423 — leading characteristics of Carlyle's earliest works, 424–426 — influence of Richter visible in Sartor Resartus, 426, 427 — merits and defects of Critical Essays and French Revolution, 427 — Carlyle possesses a vigorous conceptive imagination, but is not an artist, 428 — invents the Hero-cure, 429 — his irritability possibly due to his having been a schoolmaster, 430, 431 — his cant, 432 — his cynicism, 433, 437 — his defects as an historian, 433, 434 — striking qualities of his histories, 435, 436 — a denouncer of shams, gradually becoming very like a sham, 438–440 — loyalty of mankind to a natural leader, 441 — character of Friedrich, 441–444.

Character, article on, 356–373 — definition of morals, 356, 357 — the moral element universal, 357 — omnipotent, 359 — is the truth, 360 — possessed in unusual fulness by occasional men, 361, 362 — the judge and measure of religions, 363 — changes in popular estimate of systems of religion, 363–366 — religion original, not imported, 367 — present position of churches, clergy, and creeds, 368–370 — inspiration perpetual, 370 — character superior to accidents, 372 — its sufficiency, 373.

Children's Books of the Year, article on, 236–249 — Catholic literary taste of children, 237 — books, once enchanting, now obsolete, 238, 239 — difference between former and recent boy-heroes, 240 — characteristics of Mayne Reid's and Mr. Kingston's stories, 241 — excellence of "Carleton's," 241 — merits and defects of Mr. Trowbridge's, Miss Ashford's, Mr. Alger's, 242 — genius of "Little Prudy Stories," 243 — illustrations of some recent children's books, 244 — value and charm of "The Flower People," "Seven Little Sisters," "Studies for the Seaside," and "Boys at Chequasset," 245 — practical juvenile books, Jacob Abbott's, their genuine worth, 246, 247 — popularity of "Oliver Optic's" several series, 248 — our children's books more national than others, 248, 249.

Clark, Henry James, his Mind in Nature, critical notice of, 627 - 630.

Clay, Henry, article on, 147 - 194 — his wonderful popularity, 147, 148 — his cultivation of it, 149, 150 — education and life at Richmond, 151, 152 — influence of Chancellor Wythe, 153, 154 — cultivation of oratory, 154 - 156 — studies law and commences practice at Lexington, Ky., 157 — his speedy success, and its causes, 158 — enters politics, 159 — popular habits, 160 — elected U. S. Senator, 161 — supports President Jefferson's policy, 161 - 163 — elected Speaker of House of Representatives, 164 — responsible for war of 1812, 164 - 166 — not the interest of American politicians to promote war, 167, 168 — champion of "American System," 169 - 171 — social habits while Speaker, 172 — his connection with the Missouri Compromise, 173 - 175 — his rare felicitousness on occasions of ceremony, 175 — his twenty-four years' candidature for Presidency, 176 — friendly relations with Jackson, 177 — changed by his opposition to Jackson's conduct of Florida war, 178, 179 — by his favoring John Quincy Adams for President, 180, 181 — Secretary of State, and his duel with John Randolph, 181, 182 — life at Ashland, 182 — Jackson's efforts to injure him, 183, 184 — Senator again, 185 — mistakes in leadership, 185 - 188 — his narrow views concerning slavery, 189, 190 — his devotion to the Union, 191, 192 — his oratory, statesmanship, and personal character, 193, 194.

Climatic Influences as bearing upon Secession and Reconstruction, article on, 24 - 47 — inadequacy of current theories of the cause of secession, 24 — slavery not the prime cause, 25 — why the South advocated Free Trade and State Rights, 26 — slavery abolished in Northern States because unprofitable, 27 — fertile soil and genial climate made Southern States agricultural, sterile soil and cold climate made Northern States commercial and manufacturing, 27, 28 — agriculture tends to produce an aristocracy, 29 — to repress intellectual activity, 30 — to accumulate landed property in hands of few, 32, 33 — direct influence of climate on social conditions, 34 - 36 — doctrine of State Rights harmless as a theory, powerful for evil only from causes produced by climatic influences, 36 — manufactures, a remedy for social tendencies produced by climate of Southern States, 38 — never generally established at South on account of hostile public sentiment, 39 — too powerful competition of North, by greater capital and prior establishment, 40 - 42 — Southern States should be permitted to protect their manufactures by a tariff, for a series of years, 43, 44 — necessity of possession of suffrage by the negro for self-protection and the preservation of democratic institutions at the South, 45 - 47.

Cobden, Richard, on international arbitration, 479.

Courts of Conciliation, article on, 135 - 146 — established in Denmark in 1795, 136 — their constitution, 136 — service on them compulsory, sessions secret, extent of their jurisdiction, 137 — mode of procedure in them, 137 - 139 — theory underlying them, 140 — different character of French system, 141 — success of Danish system, 141 — its causes; the cases brought before it mainly quarrels between neighbors, 142 — of a simple character, 143 — constitution of the ordinary law courts is very defective, 144 — personal character and influence of the judges, 144 — such courts could be advantageously introduced in the Southern States for causes to which freedmen are parties, 146.

Dante, and his latest English Translators, article on, 509 - 529 — mental and spiritual characteristics of Dante, 509, 510 — individual and artistic character of his Divine Comedy, 511 — friendship between him and Giotto, founded on their similar truthfulness and simplicity, 512 — the Divine Comedy an allegory of human life and immortality, 513 — its intense religiousness, 513 — Chaucer's appreciation of it, 514 — neglect of it for four hundred years after Chaucer's death, 515 — first translation of it into German [1769], into French [1776,] 515 — worthlessness of Boyd's translation, 516 — merits and defects of Cary's 517, 518 — list of English translations, 519 — opinions of translators as to best mode of rendering it, 520 — difficulties of translating poetry, 520, 521 — special difficulty of translating Dante, because he wrote at an early stage of language, 521 — because of great difference between vocabulary of English and Italian, 522 — value of Parsons's translation, 523 — compared with those of Dayman and Ford, 524 - 526 — Dante can be best rendered by an unrhymed, literal, line-for-line translation, 526, 527 — success of Longfellow and Rossetti in this mode, 528 — Divine Comedy not a popular poem, 529.

De Tocqueville, The Error of, article on, 321 - 334 — DeTocqueville sent by Louis Philippe to study institutions of United States, 321 — condition of nation at time of his visit, 323 — his assumption that the United States are a confederation of sovereignties, 324 — that an attempt at secession would not be opposed by the general government, 325, 326 — supremacy of general government asserted in Fugitive Slave Bill, 328, 329 — popularity of "Democracy in America" in England, 330 — its doctrine welcomed and acted on by prominent Englishmen at outbreak of Rebellion, 331, 332 — De Tocqueville's definition of liberty, 333 — this the inspiration and secret of the struggle for national unity, 333, 334.

Dickens, Charles, his opinion of the American press, 413.

Diplomacy during the Rebellion, Our, article on, 446 - 472 — general character of the foreign and domestic policy of President Lincoln, 446, 447 — pitiable state of our foreign relations when his term commenced, 448 — excellence of his foreign appointments, 449 — instructions to ministers, 449, 450 — haste of France and England in acknowledging belligerent rights of Rebels, 450, 451 — aid afforded Rebels by England, 452 — wise settlement of Trent difficulty, 453, 454 — England's decision in the Alexandra case, and correspondence growing out of it, 455, 456 — selfish policy of England, 457, 458 — condition of Mexico, 459 — alliance of England, France, and Spain against her, 460, 461 — ostensible objects of each, 462, 463 — real object of France, 464, 465 — attitude of United States, 466 — secret of Louis Napoleon's anxiety to be peacemaker between United States and the Rebels, 467 — appointment of Maximilian as Emperor, 468 — conditions of his acceptance of empire, 469 — our general relations with foreign powers, 470, 471 — Secretary Seward's abilities and services as a diplomatist, 471, 472.

Doolittle, Rev. Justus, his Social Life of the Chinese, critical notice of, 574.

Dryden, John, on translating poetry, 532, 538.

Eaton, Cyrus, his History of Thomaston, etc., critical notice of, 318, 319.

Eddy, Daniel C., D. D., his Young Man's Friend, critical notice of, 606 - 609.

Ellicott, Rt. Rev. Charles J., his Commentaries on St. Paul's Epistles, critical notice of, 293 - 299.

Farrar, Mrs. John, her Recollections of Seventy Years, critical notice of, 571, 572.

Financial Future, Our, article on, 100 - 135 — mischievous tendency to regard our national debt as a benefit, 101 — good effect of proposition to pay it by subscription, 102 — national advantage of paying a considerable share of it by direct tax, 103 — ruinous effect of exporting our securities, 104, 105 — complexity of our bank and government currency, 105 - 107 — gold the best attainable standard of value, 107 - 109 — bases of present value of the paper dollar; want of a circulating medium, and the credit of government, 111 - 114 — best method of bringing our currency to par, 111 - 125 — argument against return to specie payment, 114, 115 — laws of supply and demand determined without reference to the circulating medium, 116 - 119 — obstacles to voluntary funding of the redundant currency, 120 - 122 — advantages of compulsory funding, with suitable legislation to prevent the injustice of making those who had contracted debts in currency pay in coin, 123 — policy of fixing by law a date for resuming specie payment, 124 — reasons why currency should be furnished by government and not by banks, 126 - 130 — necessary features of government currency, 130 - 132 — not necessary in this country to borrow money to carry on war, 133, 134 — proper basis of our future financial policy, 135.

Flint, Austin, Jr., D. D., his Physiology of Man, critical notice of, 624 - 627.

Frothingham, Richard, his Life and Times of Joseph Warren, critical notice of, 289 - 291.

Goodwin, William W., his Syntax of the Moods and Tenses of the Greek Verb, critical notice of, 301 - 306.

Harper's Weekly, critical notice of, 637, 638.

Herald, The New York, article on, 373 - 419 — power of London Times, 374 — the telegraph prevents a paper despotism, 374, 375 — prestige of editorials gone, 375, 376 — everybody reads the morning paper, 377 — national importance of New York papers, and its causes, 378 — The Herald the chief paper of New York City, 379 — was one of the chief obstacles to correct views of Secession War, 380 — career of its founder, 381 - 400 — his education, 382 — experiences and observations in Boston, 383 — in Charleston, 384 — in New York, 384, 385 — habits, 385 — first success as a journalist, 386 — connection with the Courier and Enquirer, 387, 388 — begins the Globe, 388 — the Herald, 389 — method and habits of labor, 390 — characteristics of Herald that secured purchasers, 391 - 395 — first money article, 395 — success of Herald assured, 396 — acquired its ill name by irreverent treatment of the Catholic Church, 397, 398 — by its unscrupulous course in politics, 399 — its course in the Secession War, 400 — generosity to its reporters, 401 — personal character of editor, 402, 403 — the best reporters, most skilfully handled, make best paper, 403 - 405 — means of suppressing Herald, 406 — sketch of Tribune, its editors, writers, and errors in management, 406–411 — opportunity of Times to become chief paper, 411 — Dickens's opinion of Herald, 413, 414 — inadequate pay of writers and reporters, 415–417 — conditions of success to a newspaper, 418.

Herman, or Young Knighthood, critical notice of, 632–634.

Higginson, Thomas Wentworth, his edition of Translation of the Works of Epictetus, critical notice of, 599–606.

Holland, J. G., his Plain Talks on Familiar Subjects, critical notice of, 299–301.

Hours of Labor, article on, 195–209 — importance of determining the number of hours laborers can most profitably work, 195 — conditions of production, 196 — evil effects of working too many hours per day, 197 — effect of a local and of a general reduction of the hours of labor on wages and production, 198–204 — machinery has not diminished labor in this country, but elevated the standard of living, 204, 205 — production should not be reduced while national debt is unpaid, 205 — production greatly increased by confidence in stability of government and integrity of the judiciary, 206, 207 — prodigality of rich does not help the poor, 207, 208 — improvement needed in application of products to uses of life, 208.

International Arbitration, article on, 473–509 — works on international law very defective in information respecting arbitration, 473 — different methods of arbitration practised, 474, 475 — efforts by individuals and societies to have an international congress to settle disputed points, 476, 477 — attempts in United States Congress to secure international arbitration, 478 — action of British Parliament, 479, 480 — of French government, 481 — questions between France and United States submitted to arbitration, 482 — questions between United States and Spain, 483 — between England and United States, 483–492–499 — between United States and Mexico, 493–496 — between Portugal and United States, 496–498 — is a government responsible to its citizens for claims it attempts to settle? 498, 499 — questions between United States and several other nations, 500, 501 — cases in which arbitration is successful and proper, 502 — questions in which it is not practicable, as in regard to war for maintenance of Union, assumed right of French Emperor to establish Maximilian in Mexico, 504, 505 — refusal of England to submit to arbitration questions between herself and United States arising out of Secession War, 506–509.

Law, Military and Martial, article on, 334–356 — readiness of American people to engage in war against secession explained, 335 — distinction between military and martial law, 336 — martial law defined by Duke of Wellington and Judge Holt, 337 — correct definition, 337 — where it prevails of necessity, 338 — need of military commissions, 339 — their composition and jurisdiction, 339 — cases justly tried by them in Secession War, 340 — cases improperly tried by them, 341 — exercise of martial law during Secession War justified, 341–343 — provost courts, their jurisdiction, 344 — only two established during Secession War, 344 — criticism of decision by Bureau of Military Justice, that neither military commissions nor provost courts can have jurisdiction of civil suits, 345 — military crimes and their punishment, as set forth in articles of war, 346 — court-martial, how constituted, 347 — mode of procedure, 348, 353, 354 — duties of judge-advocate, 349 — difficulties of his position, 349–352 — remedy for them, 353 — power of President to dismiss officers in disgrace, 355, 356.

Lindsley, Philip, D. D., his Works [edited by Rev. LeRoy J. Halsey], critical notice of, 573, 574.

Mantua, Ducal, article on, 48–100 — origin of Mantua, 48, 49 — description of it, 49–54 — its history under Romans, 55 — legend of Virgil's birth, 56 — of soldier who pierced Christ's side, 55, 56 — under Lombard rule, 56 — under Charlemagne, 57 — under Rudolph, who appointed a lord its ruler, 57 — Boniface, his munificence and wars, 57, 58 — the famous Matilda, 59 — under a republican government, 60–64 — under captains-general, the Bonacolsi, 64, 65 — under the Gonzagas, 66–100 — two leading elements of character in Italian society, 67 — social condition of Mantua under Luigi, first of the Gonzagas, 68, 69 — patronage of arts and letters by Lodovico, 74 — works of Giulio Romano, 76, 77, 84–87 — splendor and corruption of Vincenzo's reign, 91, 92 — Ferdinand's repudiation of Camilla Faa di Casale, 93, 94 — sack of Mantua, and crimes leading to it, 95–100.

McCulloch, Secretary, his views respecting the currency, 128–132.

Martin, Henri, his History of France, Mary L. Booth's translation, critical notice of, 640, 641.

Message, the President's, article on, 250–260 — anxious interest felt in President Johnson's first message, 250 — course of Democratic party toward him, 251 — his attitude toward Rebel States changed by their misconduct and by the result of Northern elections, 252 — evil influence of decision of Connecticut and Wisconsin against impartial suffrage, 253 — moderation and sincerity of message, 254 — its principal merit that it does not insist on a special scheme of reconstruction, 255 — weakness of reasons for not extending right of suffrage to negroes of Rebel States, 256 — too much importance attached to formal acceptance by these States of the constitutional amendment prohibiting slavery, 257 — duties devolving on Congress, 258 — apparent comprehension of them, and readiness to discharge them, 259, 260.

Mill, John Stuart, his Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte, critical notice of, 275 - 280 — on protective tariff, 170.

Mozart, Wolfgang Amadeus, his Letters, translated by Lady Wallace, critical notice of, 609 - 614.

Nichols, Brevet-Major George Ward, his Story of the Great March, critical notice of, 312 - 315.

Palfrey, John Gorham, his History of New England [Abridgment], critical notice of, 638 - 640.

President on the Stump, The, article on, 530 - 544 — characteristics of President Lincoln's public speeches, familiar dignity, confidence in the right-mindedness of his fellow-men, honest manliness, unconsciousness of self, 530 - 532 — President Johnson speaks to the people as if they were a mob, 532 — Americans not flattered by allusions to plebeian origin of their President, 532 — dangers of popular oratory, 533 — Congress not to blame for so long delay in maturing a policy, 535 — golden opportunity lost, just after President Lincoln's death, 535, 536 — opinion of a nation moves slowly, 536, 537 — President's right to choose a policy, and to have it criticised, 537 — weakness of attempts to "sustain the President," 538 — he assumes sectional ground, 539, 540 — the speech he should have made to Southern delegations, 541 - 544.

Prison Discipline Question, The Present State of, article on, 210 - 235 — inferiority of American prison discipline to English, 211 — sketch of Captain Maconochie's life, and circumstances that turned his attention to prison discipline, 211 - 213 — his plan for improving convicts, by labor and a system of marks, 214, 215 — his experiment at Norfolk Island, its terrible condition when he was appointed governor, 216 — great change wrought, 217, 218 — M. Marsangy's system, 220 — principles of Irish convict system, as stated by Sir Walter Crofton, 221 — the five stages of it, quoted from Miss Carpenter's work, 222 - 229 — instances of its marked success, 224 - 227 — good conduct of discharged convicts, graduates of this system, 229 - 231 — decrease of crimes and criminals in consequence, 232 — cost of keeping convicts, 233 — prison systems of different countries, 234 — value of Miss Carpenter's work, 234, 235.

Punchard, George, his History of Congregationalism, critical notice of, 291 - 293.

Robertson, Frederick W., his Life and Letters, edited by Stopford A. Brooke, critical notice of, 280 - 289.

Ruskin, John, his Sesame and Lilies, critical notice of, 306 - 312 — his opinion of Giotto, 513 — his explanation of Secession War, 13.

Saadi, his Gulistan, translated by Francis Gladwin, critical notice of, 260 - 264.

Sabin, Joseph, his Reprints, critical notice of, 641 - 644.

Sherman and his Campaigns, by Bowman and Irwin, critical notice of, 575 - 586.

Sibley, John Langdon, his Notices of the Triennial and Annual Catalogues of Harvard University, critical notice of, 318.

Stirling, James Hutchinson, his Secret of Hegel, critical notice of, 264 - 275.

Stoddard, Richard Henry, his Melodies and Madrigals, critical notice of, 644.

Swinburne, Algernon Charles, his Tragedies, critical notice of, 544 - 555.

Ward, Artemus, his Travels, critical notice of, 586 - 592.

Wells, William V., his Life of Samuel Adams, critical notice of, 614 - 619.

Whately, Richard, his Essays on the New Testament, critical notice of, 293 - 299 — his views on prison discipline, 213.

Whittier, John G., his Snow-Bound, critical notice of, 631, 632.

Cambridge: Stereotyped and Printed by Welch, Bigelow, & Co.